Moving About the Shenandoah and Luray Valleys

As March moved into April, the First (West) Virginia remained near Strasburg, Virginia. What would unfold in April was Stonewall Jackson's slow retreat southward, while Nathaniel Banks' Federal command hesitantly followed him up the Valley. By the end of the month, the Confederates were at the Southern end of Massanutten Mountain waiting on the Federals.

Turner Ashby's cavalry watched and skirmished with the Northern troops, including the First. By the 17th of April, both sides faced each other at Rude's Hill north of New Market, an important road junction. Here a road moved eastward through Massanutten into the Luray Valley, the only such road through the Mountain northward. From this position, Jackson blocked Banks' further movement southward and could watch the gap in Massanutten should any Federal force appear from that direction.

To this point, Joshua Winters in Company G, made note of General Shields reviewing his division (including the First). The "devishin got in one big field. He rode out in a buggy. It was a big croud of peapell."

Jackson lingered only a short time after Banks' arrival opposite the Confederate position at Rudes Hill. He dropped back to Harrisonburg and then eastward to Conrad's Store from where he could move north, east or west. Meanwhile the Federals moved forward into New Market and from there Banks sent a detachment of 1,000 men or more through the gap in Massanutten into the Luray or Page Valley. On April 30, the First was sent to reinforce this detachment.

"On the 26th the regiment hailed with delight the appearance of Colonel Thoburn, who had just rejoined the command, though yet suffering from his wound.

So as April ended, the First was at Columbia Bridge, on the South Fork of the Shenandoah, watching for Confederates. April had been relatively quiet. May would not be.

Living History – University High School

On Friday April 21st, a number of us had the pleasure and honor of taking part in the living history program organized by the Civil War Trust's 2016 National Teach of the Year, Phil Caskey at University High School outside of Morgantown.

Hundreds of middle school and high school students from Monongalia County schools visited the living history site adjacent to University HS. About 15-20 living historians were divided into 9 or 10 stations and students rotated from station to station to learn about the American Civil War and the people who fought in that war.

The students came in three waves. The first wave was comprised of sophomores at UHS and unfortunately was interrupted rather rudely by a cold rain. Those students retreated to the shelter of the school where Abraham and Mary Todd Lincoln made a presentation in one of the gymnasiums at the schools to the wet students.

The second wave came in the form of eighth graders from Westwood, Mountaineer and Clay-Battelle middle schools. Those students did make the complete circuit of reenactor stations, finishing in the sunshine that was baking the humidity out of the ground. Those students also got a chance to hear the Lincolns in the gym.

After lunch the third wave was open to all other students at UHS and a few of them wandered down to the field below the school to talk to us. At the end of this group, about a dozen of us did a skirmish line demonstration across the field.

From the WVRA, John and Stormy Brasuk held down one station, with the help of a couple of members. In addition to the live fire of their artillery piece, they were presenting short programs medical and cavalry.

REVIEWS

Yankees, Rebels and Rabble Rousers

The Rich Mountain Battlefield Foundation presented an excellent symposium on April 1 in Beverly on the second floor of the IOOF Hall. Upon arrival, I found a number of displays set up including an excellent display of West Virginia Federal hospital/medical carte de vistas, put together by Rick Wolfe. Terry Lowry and Hunter Lesser were present with a supply of books written by those two respective authors.

Rick Wolfe kicked off the program and then opened the schedule with a very interesting presentation on a man I new little about, but one who was involved in West Virginia Civil War history, William Powell The Iron Man. Powell was one of those fascinating 19th-century stories of self-made men, successful in business and politics who rise to further prominence leading men in the Civil War. Powell was associated with the 2nd West Virginia Cavalry and saw plenty of action in the war. He was wounded and captured, spending time in Libby Prison before being released.

Robert E. Lee's Feuding Generals: Wise vs. Floyd was the title of Hunter Lesser's presentation. Both those generals saw action in West Virginia's mountains during the war, both on the Confederate side.

The third presentation, Colonel Joseph Thoburn and the 1864 Shenandoah Valley Campaign from Scott Patchan, had to be canceled, but was more than ably replaced with Terry Lowry's Battle of Charleston. The program closed with Soldiers, Statesman and Politicians: Commanders of the 23rd Ohio by Dr. Billy Joe Peyton.

At our other station, Mark Tennant and Ralph McCready braved the rainy night and were joined by Christ Taylor, Kevin Skaggs, Ron Wenig and yours truly to present programs on flags, surgeons and Ralph on Allen Pinkerton.

We were allowed only about 10-12 minutes per group so the program moved quickly. Also included in the groups were Eric Smallwood's station, the 27th Virginia, Barbour Grays, the Daughters of the American Revolution, a medical display and some unattached reenactors.

Figure 2 Ron Wenig discusses the role of surgeons in the Civil War to middle school students from Monongalia County. By this time in the morning, the rain had passed, despite the rain clouds over the UHS field house.

This was a worthwhile effort that reached hundreds of students and helped to educate the students on history. The Lincoln reenactors were excellent and I would have liked to spend more time hearing their presentation. Phil Caskey plans to do this next year.

NRA – the executive committee is investigating the possibility of insuring the entire group under a policy from the NRA.

THANK YOU – Thanks to Peter Baxter for his help with the Dispatch.

FOR SALE – Hunter Lesser has advised that anyone who wants a signed copy of The Civil War in Lewis County, WV, by Roy Bird Cook, he might be able to oblige.

TRIVIA QUESTION – In Whitelaw Reid's definitive study of Ohio regiments in the Civil War, which West Virginia unit is listed as one of the regiments from Ohio? I once heard Gary Gallagher, famous Civil War historian say that every student of the Civil War, no every student period, should know the five components of the Compromise of 1850. After all the Compromise plays a big role in the coming of the Civil War. Can you name them?

Please do not send any correspondence to the PO Box in Buckhannon. Membership information can be sent to me. Remember you must be a member of record to qualify for membership benefits. To be covered under the respective insurance policies that the 1st West Virginia and the 25th Virginia infantry units participate in, you must be a member of record. TASAS members who are also spouses of 1st W. Va. members are covered under the USV insurance. Insurance questions about the 1st Virginia Cavalry should be directed to the Unit Representative.

Yours truly, has no connection to the TASAS-WVRA Facebook page and takes no responsibility for it. Nor do I have any responsibility for the WVRA Facebook page. I would suggest that the TASAS-WVRA Facebook page seems to have more up to date information.
